

N.C. Pest Control Announces Technician of the Year Winners

NCPCA is pleased to announce the winners of this year's technician of the year award. There is one winner in both the Pest Control phase and the WDO phase. We would like to congratulate Christina Chamis from Pest-X Exterminating Company as the winner of the Pest Control Phase and Larry Spears, Jr. from Armor Pest Control as the winner of the WDO phase.

Winners were chosen based off of recommendations given by their supervisor and their experience in the field as well how they conduct their selves while working. Both winners are members of the association and have at least two years experience in their particular phase.

Chamis has over ten years experience with Pest-X Exterminating. It is evident that Chamis enjoys her work and that she is very knowledgeable in the field of pest control. Customers have commented on her friendly, always smiling face as well as how she goes above and beyond the call of duty when someone has a problem with a pesky insect.

Spears' is a very confident and knowledgeable young man when it comes to the pest control industry. He studies different types of chemicals on his own time and pushes his company to continue their learning so that the customer always has the best options available to them. He always puts his best foot forward and lets the customers know he is there to find a solution to their problem. His work ethic is impeccable, and he is always there to lend a hand and to get rid of those wood destroying pest.
